These prohibitions have engendered considerable debate within the CJLS and the movement as a whole. Some rabbis and congregants believe that these prohibitions should stand as is, while others say that they should be narrowed to prohibit only what the Torah does, and still others hold that they should be abrogated altogether. Despite such varied views on homosexuality per se, the CJLS is wholly in accord with Conservative Movement resolutions that deplore violence against gay and lesbian persons, that endorse full equality for gays and lesbians in civil law, and that call on congregations to welcome gay and lesbian Jews in all aspects of synagogue life.» Reflow onto p. 692 as needed.
